DOCUMENT RESUME

ED 417 292 CE 075 975

AUTHOR Kerka, Sandra

TITLE Diversity Training. Trends and Issues Alerts.

INSTITUTION ERIC Clearinghouse on Adult, Career, and Vocational Education, Columbus, OH.

SPONS AGENCY Office of Educational Research and Improvement (ED),

Washington, DC.

PUB DATE 1998-00-00

NOTE 4p.

CONTRACT RR93002001

PUB TYPE ERIC Publications (071) -- Reference Materials -

Bibliographies (131)

EDRS PRICE MF01/PC01 Plus Postage.

DESCRIPTORS Adult Education; Annotated Bibliographies; *Cultural

Pluralism; *Diversity (Institutional); Educational Needs;

*Interpersonal Competence; *On the Job Training;

*Organizational Climate; Program Design; *Sensitivity

Training; Trend Analysis; Work Environment

ABSTRACT

According to surveys of companies employing more than 100 workers, the number of companies with diversity training (DT) programs increased from 40% in 1992 to 50-56% in 1996. Motivations behind DT include compliance with legal mandates, fear of lawsuits, social justice, desire to expand into diverse markets, and overall organizational transformation. At the same time, a backlash against DT is arising that has been explained in terms of such factors as reaction to rapid social change, deep-seated prejudice, misunderstanding of diversity, and badly planned and implemented training programs. One core issue is lack of consensus regarding the meaning of diversity. To some, DT should be focused narrowly on those categories protected by law (race, gender, and disability), whereas others argue for a more inclusive definition encompassing age, educational level, family structure, job function, sexual orientation, ethnicity, and values. Effective DT programs start with an inclusive definition of diversity and clear objectives that are linked with organizational goals and that reflect employee involvement in design and top-level support. Effective DT programs als focus on finding ways for people to work cooperatively despite differing perspectives. Contains an annotated bibliography of 29 print and Web-based resources. (MN)

Sandra Kerka

ERIC Clearinghouse on Adult, Career, and Vocational Education Center on Education and Training for Employment College of Education The Ohio State University 1900 Kenny Road Columbus, OH 43210-1090

- THE PERSONNEL OF THE CATEGORIES.
- grin Adminiat Bette whe entre stratific CENTER ERK 43 This man promit activity for the 123 Consistent magnetic for the 240 Center of the 200
- El Maria e Capartaga Cambrida de A mproprieta do Cabrido
- For example, and is open as interested in the analysis of the entire field in the entire field in the entire field in the entire field.

V.-ŀγ (~ 0 W

1.) 15

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Diversity Training

In the multicultural 1990s, workplace diversity training (DT) initiatives are everywhere. Surveys of companies employing over 100 indicate that about 40% had DT programs in 1992, 50-56% by 1996 (Gordon 1995; Wenrling and Palma-Rivas 1997). The American Society for Training and Development's 1990 survey turned up 15 diversity trainers in 1990, 138 in 1996 (Wentling and Palma-Rivas 1997). Motivations behind DT include compliance with legal mandates, fear of lawsuits, social justice, desire to expand into diverse markets, and overall organizational transformation. At the same time, a backlash is arising and "diversity training programs are exploding in their sponsors' faces" (Gordon 1995, p. 25). Reasons for the backlash may be reaction to rapid social change, deep-seated prejudice, sensationalistic journalism, misunderstanding of diversity and its identification with "political correctness," and badly planned and implemented training programs (Mobley and Payne 1992).

One core issue is the lack of consensus on the meaning of diversity. To some, the focus is narrowly on those categories protected by law, primarily race, gender, and disability (Day 1995); training is thus limited, ineffectively, to "changing white males" (Karp and Sutton 1993). Others argue for a broadly inclusive definition that encompasses age, educational level, family structure, job function, sexual orientation, ethnicity, and values, among others (Pegg 1997) and a focus on understanding and valuing the "varied perspectives and approaches to work" that people of all types of backgrounds bring (Thomas and Ely 1996, p. 80).

Characteristics of flawed DT programs include slotting of people into identity groups; trainers who represent only one point of view; attempts to change attitudes and personal opinions, not behavior; initiatives that are not connected to organizational goals and lack management commitment; providers who lack credentials, have a political agenda, deliver off-the-shelf programs, or use unorthodox, hostile tactics; training that is brief, perfunctory, or punitive; and hiring, promotion, and reward systems that do not practice what the programs preach (Day 1995; Gordon 1995; Karp and Sutton 1993; Mobley and Payne 1995). Effective programs start with an inclusive definition of diversity and clear objectives that are linked with organizational goals: employees are involved in their design and top-level support is evident. Training teams reflect diverse points of view, and training includes awareness (examining assumptions, biases, stereotypes) and skill development (listening, communication, conflict resolution). Resistance is confronted by providing facts, appealing to deep values, and identifying human commonalities while recognizing the great variation in their expression. Overall, the focus is on finding ways for people to work cooperatively despite differing perspectives. Beyond a token diversity training program, what is required is organizational culture change that incorporates respect for diversity into policies, procedures, and practices. The print and web resources listed here provide additional information.

Print Resources

American Association of Retired Persons. How to Develop a Diversity Commitment. Washington, DC: AARR 1994. (ED 392 891)
Presents a series of steps that can be used by employers to initiate or modify a diversity program, based on the city of San Diego's experience.

Carnevale, A.P., and Stone, S.C. "Diversity: Beyond the Golden Rule." Training and Development 48, no. 10 (October 1994): 22-39. (EJ 490 466)

Diversity implies differences in people based on their identifications with various groups. Organizations that have welcomed diversity are more productive and have a competitive advantage. Diversity training can be awareness based (cognitive) or skill based (behavioral).

Carr. C. "Diversity and Performance." Performance Improvement Quarterly 6, no. 4 (1993): 115-126.

Attempts to define diversity, identifies the conflict often associated with it, and investigates the conditions under which diversity can benefit organizations and the ways in which organizations must change in order to benefit.

Chung, W.V. "Challenges Confronting the Diversity Professor in Training Corporate America." Paper presented at the annual meeting of the Speech Communication Association, San Diego, CA, November 1996. (ED 405 623)

Organizational culture holds the key to the long-term success of diversity efforts. Diversity professionals who specialize in multiculturalism and organizational communication should embrace theories that yield a "managing diversity" approach.

Day, L.E.O. "The Pitfalls of Diversity Training." Training and Development 49, no. 12 (December 1995): 24-29 (EJ 514 436)

Bad diversity training programs can be damaging. The case of training gone awry at the Federal Aviation Administration (in which participants filed formal complaints and investigations followed into the specific training practices used) illustrates the importance of careful development of diversity training.

"Diversity in the Workplace in HRD." In Academy of Human Resource Development Proceedings, St. Louis, Missouri, March 2-5, 1995. Academy of Human Resource Development, 1995. (ED 398 364)

Includes "The Status of Valuing and Managing Diversity in Fortune 500 Manufacturing and Fortune 500 Service Organizations" (Sandra J. Johnson); "A Theory of Diversity" (Christopher Washington); "Work Force Diversity in Fortune 500 Corporations Headquartered in Minnesota: Concepts and Practices" (Karin Tomervik); and "Race and Ethnicity-Related Cultural Diversity Training Programs: A Typology" (Larry G. Martin).

Ewert, M.; Rice, J.K.; and Lauderdale, E. "Training for Diversity." Adult Learning 6, no. 5 (May-June 1995): 27-28. (EJ 502 531)

Cultural diversity affects organizations in several ways: recruitment retention, outreach beyond traditional clientele, management styles and decision making, and interorganizational relationships. Intercultural effectiveness can be improved by making training strategic, building cultural knowledge, targeting unconscious discrimination, and studying non-Western worldviews.

Gordon, J. "Different from What!" Training 32, no. 5 (May 1995), 25-34, (El 504 456)

Some workplace diversity programs have sown hostility as diversity training has become a full-fledged industry in the United States. The best approach may be to recognize commonalities and to be willing to capitalize on differences.

Hayles, V.R., and Russell, A.M. The Diversity Directive: Why Some Initiatives Fail & What to Do about It. Chicago, IL: McGraw-Hill/Irwin Professional Publishing, 1997.

This guide for individuals and organizations moves beyond diversity awareness training toward systems, processes, and behavior that promote substantive, lasting change. It presents individual, group, and organizational development models as well as tools and techniques.

Jamieson, D., and O'Mara, J. Managing Workforce 2000. San Francisco: Jossey-Bass, 1991.

Explains how managers can gain the "diversity advantage" through flexmanagement, a mindset that includes deep appreciation of individual dirferences and creation of more individualized policies, systems, and management practices.

Johnson, S.J. "Connecting Diversity Efforts in the Workplace with Business Mission, Goals, and Objectives." Performance Improvement Quarterly 7, no. 1 (1994): 31-39. (EJ 478 012)

Discusses the management and evaluation of diversity in the work force and emphasizes the need to link diversity issues with organizational goals and performance needs. Differences between a "quick fix" and systematic action are examined, and measuring results of diversity efforts is considered.

Karp, H.B., and Sutton, N. "Where the Diversity Training Goes Wrong." Training 30, no. 7 (July 1993): 30-34. (El 465 015)

Problems occur in diversity training when (1) trainers are all women or minorities; (2) sensitizing only white male managers is emphasized; (3) a specific set of values is reflected; (4) it is guilt driven or deals only with awareness; (5) focus is on how something is said, not why; and (6) orientation is past future but not present.

Labich, K. "Making Diversity Pav." Fortune 134, no. 5 (September 9, 1996): 177-180. (EJ 528 926)

Discusses how a variety of companies are dealing with the Jemographic realities of a changing labor force. Suggests that at the core of managing a more diverse work force is making all people feel comfortable and connected with the company.

Mobley, M., and Pavne, T. "Backlash!. The Challenge to Diversity Training." Training and Development 46, no. 12 (December 1992): 45-52. (EJ 454 053)

Awareness of diversity in the workplace is on the rise, but so is a backlash to some of the issues that it taises. Ways to prevent backlash include getting management support, involving employees in training design, using an inclusive definition of diversity, acknowledging reservance, valuing sameness, and affirming the value of individual views.

Mueller, N.L. "Wisconsin Power and Light's Model Diversity Program." Training and Development 50, no. 3 (March 1996), 57-60. (EJ 519 341)

Wisconsin Power and Light used results of an employee survey on cultural diversity to develop a training program based on increasing awareness of the significance of being able to work together. Employees identify specific individual actions and formulate work-group ground rules that respect diversity.

Pegg, L. C. "Diversity Training and Education in the Work Place." Journal for Vocational Special Needs Education 19, no. 2 (Winter 1997): 62-66. (E) 542-150)

Demonstrates opportunities and dangers of diversity training. Outlines steps needed to manage transformation to multiculturalism and makes recommendations for lasting change in the areas of leadership, education and training, evaluation and follow-up, culture and management systems, and communications.

Rossett, A., and Bickham, T. "Diversity Training: Hope, Earth and Cynteism." Training 31, no. 1 (January 1994), 40-46 (EJ 475-328). Goals of diversity training may be compliance, harmony, inclusion, justice, and transformation. Effective programs are predicated on leadership support, authentic training strategies, and alignment with organizational goals.

Swanson, R. A. "Valuing Diversity." Journal for Vocational Special Needs Education 19, no. 2 (Winter 1997): 52-55. (EJ 542 148)

Diversity is seen as either a vital organizational process, a value-added activity, an optional activity, or a waste of resources. Performance is the key to making diversity a core organizational process. The focus should be on how and whether diversity contributes to organizational performance.

Tan, D.L.; Morris, L., and Romero, J. "Changes in Attitude after Diversity Training." Training and Development 50, no. 9 (September 1996): 54-55. (EJ 530 292)

It is critical that managers and supervisors promete new attitudes and behavior. A second stage of diversity training should focus on the application of diversity ideas and the development of an environment that is conductive to conflict resolution.

Thomas, D.A., and Elv. R.J. "Making Differences Matter." Harvard Business Review 74, no. 5 (September-October 1996), 79-90.

Explains why organizations should go beyond the old rationales for diversity (discrimination-farmess and access-legitimacy) to the learning and effectiveness paradigm, which shows that diversity can leverage different perspectives and improve the way work is done.

Thomas, V.C. "The Downside of Diversity." Training and Development 48, no. 1 (January 1994): 60-62.

Diversity training can cause confusion and hostility. A cautious, realistic approach that aims for long-term results can make it work.

Told, F. "Professional Learning for Ethno-Cultural Diversity." International Journal of Lifelong Education 13, no. 2 (March-April 1994): 81-124. (EJ 482-704)

Reviews issues in police training and approaches to race relations education. Suggests that the learning took place outside the classroom and was collaborative (police-community), concluding that race relations policy must be developed through a multicultural dialogue.

Van Eron, A.M. "How to Work with a Diversity Consultant." Training and Development 50, no. 4 (April 1996): 41-44.

These guidelines include a checklist for selecting a consultant, comparison of diversity consultant fees, desirable personal characteristics, and additional resources.

Wentling, R.M., and Palma-Rivas, N. Diversity in the Workforce Series. Berkeley: National Center for Research in Vocational Education, University of California, 1997.

Includes Report #1—Literature Review: Report #2—Current Status and Future Trends of Diversity Initiatives in the Workplace: Diversity Experts' Perspective: Report #3—Current Status of Diversity Initiatives in Selected Midtinational Corporations.

Williams, T., and Green, A. Dealing with Difference. How Trainers Can Take Account of Cultural Diversity. Brookfield, VT. Gower, 1994. Familiarizes trainers with the implications of culture on learning and development and provides them with techniques for taking different cultural values into account when planning and delivering training. Provides a checklist for trainers to use in assessing their ability to manage the implications of culture for the learning and Jevelopment process.

Web Resources

American Institute for Managing Diversity, 50 Hurt Plata, Suite 1150, Atlanta, GA 30303; 404:302-9226; fax. 404-302-9252; http://www.aimd.org/

Cultural Diversity at Work, 13751 Lake City Way NE, Suite 210, Seattle, WA 98125-8612; 206-362-0336; fax: 206-363-5028; e-mail: ildeaneig diversityhotwire.com; http://www.diversityhotwire.com/

Diversity Forum features extensive links to and listings of job opportunities with companies that are committed to diversity; 408,995-3440; fax: 408,995-3441; e-mail. info@diversityforum.com; http://www.diversityforum.com.

National Association of Gender Diversity Training 4621 East Abraham Lane, Phoemx, AZ 85024; 602 473-0426; fax: 602.473-0427; e-mail: gender/g primenet.com/ http://www.primenet.com/~gender/

Developed with funding from the Office of Educational Research and Improvement, U.S. Department of Education, under Contract No. RR93002021. Opinions expressed do not necessarily reflect the position or policies of OERI or the Department. Trends and Issues Alerts may be treely reproduced.

